getting hitched

Wanted to do a quick post to announce my exciting news that I'm an engaged lady now! This picture was taken only moments before the question was asked, on Pfeiffer State Beach in Big Sur California at the end of a wonderful 10-day vacation. I guess my mad skillz with a tent and Coleman stove really impressed him! I couldn't be happier, and my fiancée has really taken to his new role as well. We seem to have permanent smiles on our faces, and can't believe our good fortune. We are now already in a scramble to set a date, because I start my residency in July and want to be married before then. Fortunately, we've been dating for almost 5 years, so it doesn't feel like we are rushing the issue! Since I have one of the world's most HUGENORMOUS families, we are hoping to keep things fun and low key in order to afford having adorable little cousins running everywhere during the reception. As for a ring, my sweetie wanted me to pick one that I really love, so for now I have a silly cubic zirconia one from Tar-jay, oh la la. Today I'm off to check out some other options, but what really matters is asking the question and getting the right answer!

Congrats! Congrats! Honeymooning during internship will help make it all go by faster . . .

Congrats! It is so exciting, isn't it? Although occasionally you'll want to smother him in his sleep, for the most part marriage is a wonderful thing. Moxie and I have been together 8.5 years and married for almost 3, and we are happier every day. Here's to you having the same!
